

A photograph of a decorated Christmas tree in a rustic setting. The tree is a dense evergreen, heavily decorated with white and red beaded garlands, red and green ribbons, and various ornaments including white snowflake-like decorations, small red and white baubles, and a large yellow star on top. Several blue and white socks are hanging from the branches. The tree is positioned in front of a dark wooden door and a brick fireplace. To the left, various kitchen items like a wooden spoon and a black pot are hanging on the wall. A large wooden wheel is visible in the bottom right corner.

Christmas Trees from Nova Scotia ...

It's An Old Tradition

Christmas Trees from Nova Scotia

Diversity

We supply a great diversity of tree sizes, from little tabletops to extra large trees for city squares. Similarly, we provide a range of densities to meet customer requirements.

◀ Heavy Density

A full foliage tree. Plantation grown or harvested from cultivated natural stands. Pruned and shaped until mature to attain heavy density and balanced taper.

◀ Medium Density

Grown in the same environment, with the same colour, taper and shape as the heavy density tree.

Light Density ▶

The traditional Christmas tree. Harvested from cultivated natural stands.

Tradition

A Christmas tree from Nova Scotia has become a powerful tradition for many North American families. Balsam firs in particular are highly valued. Our climate is ideal for growing such trees.

Unique Needle Structure

Nova Scotia's balsam fir trees display a wealth of soft yet sturdy brush, enhanced by the full placement of needles around each bough. Customers have come to appreciate and prefer this very distinctive needle structure.

Fragrance

Most evergreens have some fragrance, but there's absolutely nothing like a balsam fir. Place this tree in any setting and you'll realize the full, rich fragrance of balsam.

Hardiness

Frost strikes this province early in September, and cool nights continue to harden the tree for the next two or three months until it is cut. Our trees will stand up to cold and changeable weather in retail lots. They will keep their needles right through the holiday season. We encourage retailers to help educate the customer on keeping the tree fresh.

Fresh

With rare exceptions, it's possible to cut trees right up to Christmas. Cold, moist conditions allow us to harvest trees as late as possible, ensuring fresh product.

This brochure was produced by the
CHRISTMAS TREE COUNCIL OF NOVA SCOTIA
R.R. 1, Kentville, N.S.
Canada B4N 3V7

reaths and Brush

The distinctive character of our balsam fir boughs provides unsurpassed quality in wreaths and greens. Continuing demand for these products is filled by Nova Scotia craftspeople who take pride in their product.

